

The Little Lantern and the Moonbeam Path

Page 1 A Soft, Starry Night

Mina, a tiny fox, lived at the edge of Whispering Woods. Each night she carried a little lantern to walk home after helping her grandma. Tonight the wind was gentle, and the stars blinked like sleepy fireflies.

As Mina crossed the mossy bridge, her lantern flickered and grew dim. "Oh dear," she whispered, "I can barely see the path." She hugged the lantern close and took very careful steps.

Near a fern, Mina heard a tiny snuffle. A little blue beetle was turned around and could not find his leaf home. Mina knelt down and said, "I will help you."

Mina pointed her lantern so the beetle could see a shiny trail of dew. The beetle followed the sparkling drops and smiled. "Thank you, Mina," he said, bowing politely.

Farther down the path, Mina found a bunny with trembling ears. "I heard an owl hoot," said the bunny, "and now I am scared to hop alone." Mina offered, "Come beside me. We can be brave together."

The bunny and Mina walked slowly, listening to crickets sing. They counted their breaths: one, two, three, and the bunny felt calmer. Soon, the bunny's home burrow came into view.

At the hill, Mina met old Mrs. Hedgehog carrying berries in a basket. The basket was so heavy that she had to stop and rest. Mina and the bunny each carried a small handful to help.

When they reached the top, clouds drifted away and the moon shone bright. Silver moonbeams stretched across the trail like ribbons. "Look," said Mrs. Hedgehog, "your kindness made more light than one lantern."

The beetle returned and offered to guide them around puddles. The bunny listened for safe sounds ahead. Mrs. Hedgehog shared sweet berries for everyone.

At last Mina reached her little den under the oak tree. Her lantern was almost out, but her heart felt bright and full. She thanked her friends and waved goodnight.

Before sleeping, Mina looked out her window at the moonbeam path. "Tomorrow," she whispered, "I will help again whenever I can." The stars twinkled as if they agreed.

In Whispering Woods, everyone rested safely that night. One small lantern, shared with love, had guided many feet home. And that is how kindness became the brightest light of all.
